

Wageningen University

Food Valley Ambassador Program

The Food Valley Ambassador Program is looking for international students with the ambition to start an international career in food and life sciences research. The program is organised by the Food Valley organisation, Wageningen University, Nutri-akt, and ten multinational companies. These companies offer high-potential students an extra-long one-year internship opportunity in the Food Valley region. The program strives to connect you with a company that has activities in your home country.

Level of study	Master
Fields of study	Agriculture, forestry and fishery , Engineering, Environmental Science, Medical and health sciences, Natural sciences
Scholarship amount	Scholarship for international students to start a master's study at Wageningen University, including a one-year internship: depends per student. Maximum: tuition fee for the complete master study, inclusive a monthly allowance € 800 during your internship and an extra tuition fee for 6 months for the additional 6 months master's study.
Duration of the scholarship	Master study inclusive extended internship (2,5 year + 6 months) or extended internship (6 months).
Eligibility criteria	Relevant BSc (Food Science, Food Technology, Biotechnology, Nutrition, Chemical Technology or similar) gpa > 75% of maximum scale English level TOEFL 550, IELTS 6.0 or equivalent.
Deadline for application	31 augustus 2011
Extra facilities	When you enrol in the program you will have a 4-days-a-week internship at a company and you will be part of the Food Valley team, which entails: professional training on presentation skills; support for incoming or outgoing trade missions; representing Food Valley in your home country; market research in your home country for the Food Valley Society; participation in and support of the Food Valley Society meetings and the Food Valley Conference.
Further information	www.foodvalley.nl , www.grantfinder.nl